

Executive Order Loosens Open Meeting Law Requirements During Coronavirus Emergency

March 13, 2020 | Brian R. Falk | Articles

Governor Baker signed an Executive Order relieving government boards and committees from compliance with certain Open Meeting Law requirements during the novel Coronavirus (COVID-19) emergency.

The Order gives public bodies greater leeway to hold closed-door and remote meetings, so that government agencies may conduct business while also complying with public health recommendations regarding social distancing.

Under the Order:

- Public bodies may hold meetings without providing physical public access so long as the public has access to deliberations through alternative means.
- Alternative means include telephone or video conferencing and other methods of providing real-time public access to government meetings.
- When public participation at a meeting is required by law (such as a public hearing), the alternative means of public access must allow for active, real-time participation (such as an open conference call or live stream video with a comment option).
- Public bodies may allow for remote participation in meetings by all members, including the chair, with no members being physically present at the meeting location.
- All other provisions of the Open Meeting Law remain in effect (posting
