When a Will Isn't Enough, Families Can Let Trusts Do the Heavy Lifting: Here's How

June 25, 2026 | Jared J. Madison | Articles

Estate plans don't need to be complicated, but if your family needs more protection and wills and beneficiary designations aren't quite enough, trusts can be invaluable. In the latest edition of Kiplinger, Attorney Jared Madison shares common misconceptions about trusts and how they can be an important estate planning tool.

He says, "A trust can be an important part of an estate plan, but it is also one of the most commonly misunderstood estate planning tools."

Visit Kiplinger's website to view the full article.

Related Services

Elder Law

Estate Planning

Special Needs and Disability Planning

Trusts and Estates

Related People

Arthur P. Bergeron

Christine M. Boutin

Allen J. Falke

Jennifer Z. Flanagan

Robert P. Mascali

Janet Wilson Moore

Elizabeth V. Newton

Andrew B. O'Donnell

Sierra J. Smarra

Gina N. Bisceglia

Tara J. Cushing

Tammy L. Roscoe

Maureen Zucco

©2026 Mirick, O'Connell, DeMallie & Lougee, LLP. All Rights Reserved. | Worcester | Westborough | Boston | 800.922.8337